Since 2017, ArchCity Defenders has held the 'Excellence in Poverty Journalism Awards' to recognize and inspire in-depth reporting on race, class, and poverty. Few stories are written about these issues, and even fewer are written with adequate context. As a result, the public is apt to receive narratives that misrepresent and distort poor people and people of color.

As a nonprofit law firm engaging in media advocacy, we counter damaging stereotypes and messages through our work. Holding these Awards is one way we expose injustice, raise public awareness and spark conversation on issues impacting families in our region.
